

Is this idea worth doing?

Desirability, Viability, Feasibility, Ethicality (DVFE), after Alexandra Almond.

Four questions to test an idea before you commit. Everyone scores on their own first, then you talk about where you disagree. The disagreement is the useful part.

THREE STEPS

- 1 Write the idea at the top.
- 2 Each person puts a dot with their initials on all four scales, from 1 to 5. Do it on your own before anyone talks.
- 3 Look for where the dots spread out. Talk about why, and what would move the score. Rescore if minds change.

FOR EXAMPLE

A sports club tests an idea: a Friday social league run by the teens.

Do people want it?

1	2	3	4	5
			●	●●

Can we afford it?

1	2	3	4	5
	●●		●

"the hall costs money"
/ "teens could fundraise"

Can we actually build it?

1	2	3	4	5
		●●	●

Should we do it?

1	2	3	4	5
	●			●●

"Who's responsible for teens at night?"

Two scales spread out: money, and who's responsible at night. That's where the conversation is. Nobody would have said the second one out loud if they'd agreed first.

THEN TALK ABOUT IT

Who wanted this to score well?

Talk about who was hoping this idea would win, and how that shaped the scores. Those feelings are signs too.

GOING FURTHER

Use it more than once. Score the idea at the start, and again later. What moved? When you're choosing between ideas, give each one its own sheet.

Watch for agreeing too fast. If everyone scores the same, ask whether that's agreement, or nobody wanting to be the odd one out.

THE IDEA WE'RE TESTING

Do people want it?

desirability

1	2	3	4	5
not really			yes, clearly

what came up?

what would move the score?

Can we afford it?

viability

1	2	3	4	5
---	---	---	---	---

not really

yes, clearly

what came up?

what would move the score?

Can we actually build it?

feasibility

1	2	3	4	5
not really			yes, clearly

what came up?

what would move the score?

Should we do it?

ethicality

1	2	3	4	5
---	---	---	---	---

not really

yes, clearly

what came up?

what would move the score?

● KB one dot each, with your initials. The spread matters more than the average.