

PESTLE, after Francis Aguilar.

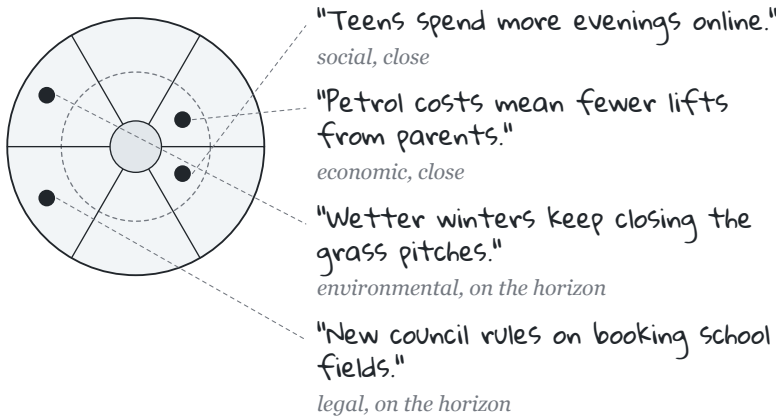

Six kinds of change happen around any team or project. Some are already on top of you, some are still on the horizon. Best done with a few people, so there's some healthy disagreement.

THREE STEPS

- 1 Write the work you're scanning for at the top.
- 2 Put each change you notice in its slice, one sticky note each. Close to the middle if it's affecting you now, near the edge if it's on the horizon.
- 3 Circle the two or three that matter most. Where do they push the same way, and where do they pull against each other?

FOR EXAMPLE

A sports club that keeps losing its teenagers.

Petrol costs and wet pitches push the same way: getting to training is getting harder. That might matter more than either on its own.

THEN TALK ABOUT IT

What feels close, and what feels far?

Talk about which changes already feel close, and which ones you'd rather not think about. Those feelings are signs too.

GOING FURTHER

Use it more than once. Scan before you start, and keep a photo. When you're choosing a direction, ask whether it holds if one of these changes. Later, scan again. What's moved closer?

Watch for listing everything. A full sheet can feel like understanding. The work is choosing what matters.

THE WORK WE'RE SCANNING FOR

○ inside the ring: affecting us now
○ outside it: on the horizon
