

What's ending, and what's beginning?

Two Loops, after Wheatley & Frieze, Berkana Institute.

When things change, an old way fades while a new one grows, both at once, and people play different parts in each. Best done with a few people, so there's some healthy disagreement.

THREE STEPS

- 1 Write the change you're part of at the top.
- 2 Put each thing you notice on its loop: the way that's fading, or the way that's growing.
- 3 Mark where your team stands, and who's starting the new, caring for what's ending, or connecting the two. Then name one thing worth carrying across, and one thing to let go of.

FOR EXAMPLE

A sports club where the teens are drifting away.

FAVING	"Saturday-only competition, as always."
GROWING	"A Friday league the teens run."
WHO'S DOING WHAT	"Two teens started it." starting the new "The old coach keeps Saturdays going." caring for what's ending "The captain plays in both." connecting the two
CARRY ACROSS	"The after-match barbecue."
LET GO	"Only Saturday games count for selection."

So the barbecue moves to Fridays, the selection rule goes, and the coach keeps Saturdays going for those who want them.

THEN TALK ABOUT IT

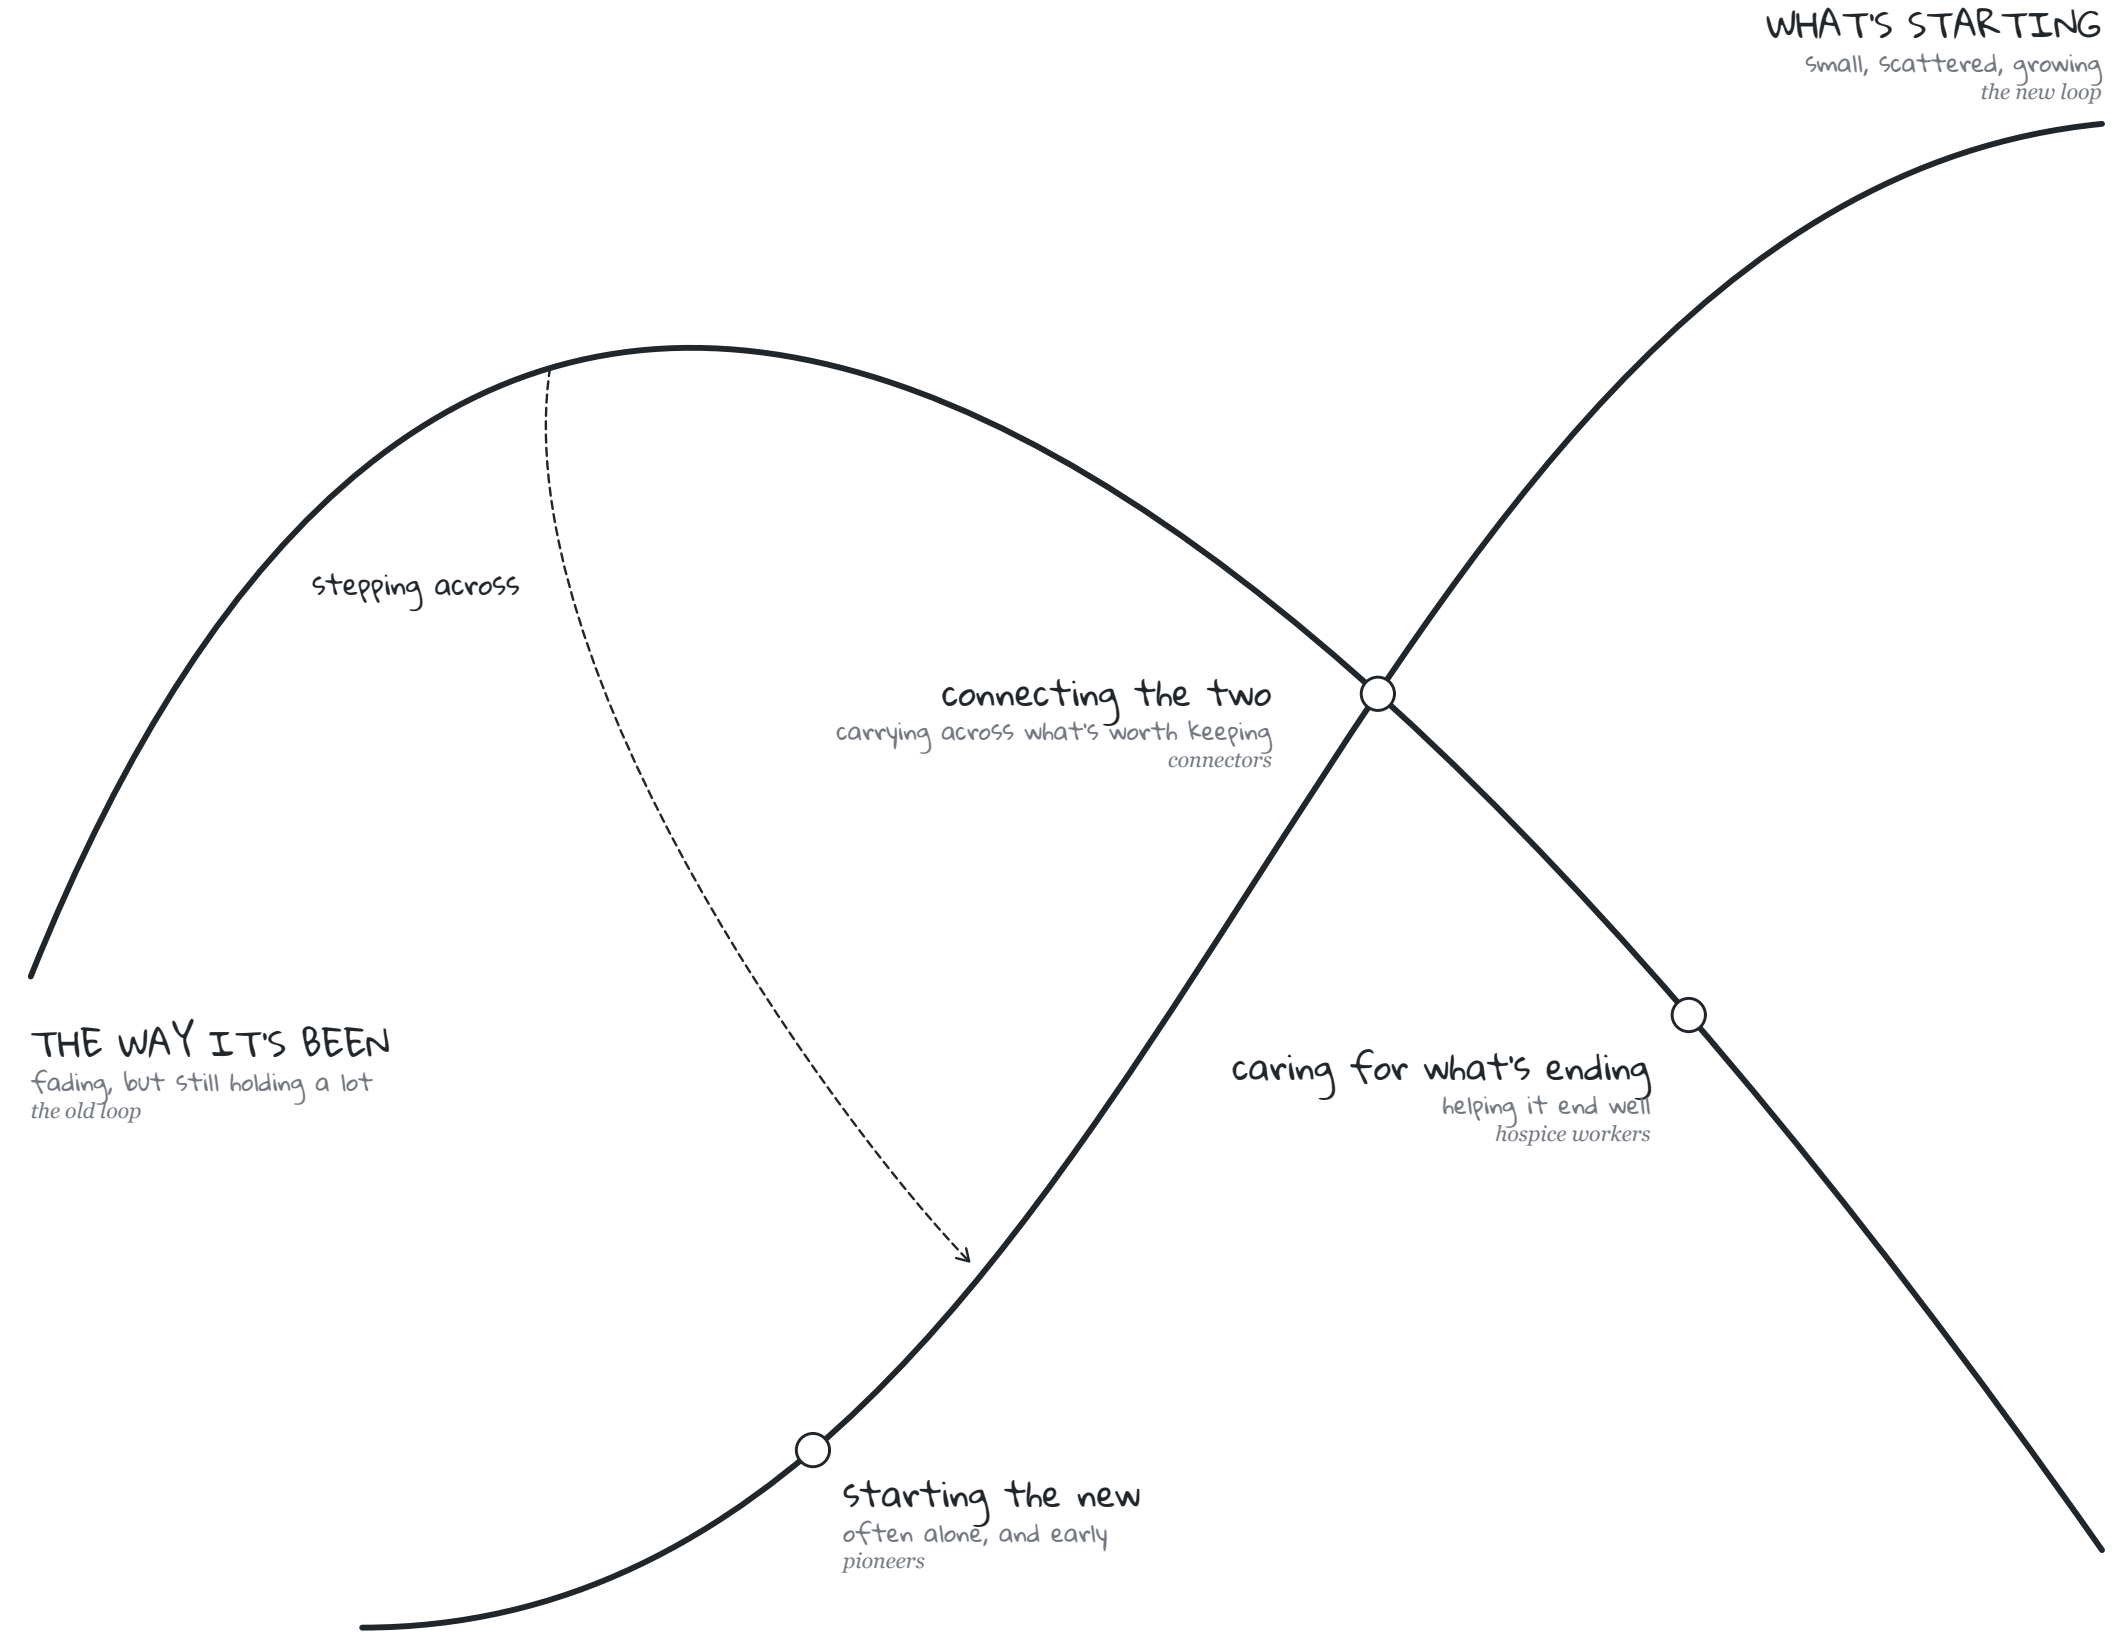

What are we grieving, and hoping for?
Talk about what's ending for you, not only for the club or the system. Those feelings are signs too.

GOING FURTHER

Use it more than once. Mark where you stand at the start. When there's friction, ask which loop it comes from. Where do you stand at the end?

Watch for treating the old loop as the enemy. Caring for what's ending is skilled work, and some of it is worth carrying across.
